

Mission Trip to North Carolina

A Mission Team comprised of members from several Southern Maryland Episcopal parishes as they prepare to leave Christ Church, in Chaptico on their way to North Carolina. The team assisted others who are working to restore homes that were damaged by Hurricane Florence in 2018. Amy and Macie Topolski, as well as, Macie's friend Missy represented Christ Church. Plans are already in the works to take another mission trip next year.

What is that weird picture?

It is a QR Code. "QR" stands for "Quick Response", which refers to the instant access to the information hidden in the Code. The QR Code is a two-dimensional version of the barcode, known from product packaging in the supermarket. Christ Church will employ two different QR Codes. Both will allow anyone, especially visitors, to use their smartphone to scan the code and be directed to specific information. One code (found in our publications such as newsletters, bulletins, etc.) will immediately direct people to the parish website. The second code found on our "Welcome Cards" found in the pews will take visitors to a special webpage where they can supply contact information and request specific information about Christ Church.

From Scratch: Explaining Episcopal

By Anna Olson and Episcopal Church Foundation

A few times a month for most of the last eight years, I have led a Bible Study at Century Regional Detention Facility, Los Angeles County's main jail for women. It's an environment where just about nobody knows what an Episcopalian is. I pass through nine locked doors and a security checkpoint, arrive in my assigned unit, and gather whoever is in the mood for Bible Study (or an hour out of her cell...). Fifteen to forty women sit in a noisy circle and wait for me to start. I have to explain Episcopalians, every time, completely from scratch.

Here's my spiel. I vary it a little each time, but the basic points seem to work pretty well:

- The Episcopal Church is a Christian Church. We believe in God and in Jesus and in the Bible. If you're familiar with Catholic Church, our worship services look pretty similar. If you're more familiar with Protestant churches, you will easily recognize the way we place a lot of emphasis on the Bible as the living Word of God, and draw on scripture to try to understand how we should shape and change our lives so that everything we do points towards God.
- Here are some things that set us apart from a lot of churches you may have experienced. We really try hard to be a church that has room for everyone. That means that our leaders and our members are men and women, people who are married and not married, have kids and don't have kids, people who are gay and straight, people of different races and different languages and cultures, people with different kinds of mental and physical abilities. When you hear us criticized, it's usually because someone thinks we have the doors open a little too wide. But we truly believe that God love us all and has placed gifts in all of us, and that the church is the richest when it can receive all those gifts and make space for people to use them.
- We're not a church with a lot of rules. That makes some people suspicious. But God really just gave us two jobs to do, love God and love each other. God could have said, "Judge one another, as I will judge you," but judging isn't actually in our job description. God kept that one for Godself. So we try to let God be God and get about the business of doing our job: love.
- Being good at our job takes practice. Anything you want to do well takes practice. If you want to learn to play the piano, you're not going to play something beautiful the first time you sit down. It's true of anything hard: braiding hair, speaking a new language, learning to read, or learning to draw. If you want to do it well, you have to practice, and you have to be willing to make a lot of mistakes along the way. That's why Jesus talks so much about forgiveness as being part of love. God shows love for us by forgiving our mistakes, and we have to find it in ourselves to forgive other people.

- Jail, incidentally, is a great place to practice neighbor-love. You have an awful lot of neighbors in a very close space, and they are not the people you would have chosen to spend this time with. No one is feeling or looking her best; everyone is pretty worried and stressed and everyone is missing someone or something on the outside. It's an advanced test of neighbor-love, when some of us haven't had much practice on the basics. But in here, when someone reaches out to you in love, it can change your whole life. Love matters a lot in here, even though it's hard.
- So today for the hour we have together, we're going to practice. We'll practice loving God by singing and praying and praising and digging into that living Word, that has something new for us every time we read it and share it. We'll practice loving each other by listening carefully and showing respect with our words and our looks and by encouraging each other and making room for each other in the circle and in the conversation and praying for each other. If you leave having spent an hour practicing loving God and loving your neighbor, we'll all be just a little bit better at our most important jobs by the end of the day!

Does this sound like the Episcopal Church you know? How would you explain your church if you had to start from scratch?

REFLECTIONS ON THIS SUNDAY'S READINGS

(JULY 21, 2019) THE SIXTH SUNDAY AFTER PENTECOST—PROPER 11, YEAR C

Welcome to Christ Church. The term “liturgy” has two meanings: time spent in Christ’s presence and time spent in service to others. If our lives do not express both of these activities, then we are failing to celebrate the liturgy (the work of the people of God) which is the mark of being a Christian.

Today’s reading from the Gospel of Luke gives priority to the time spent in Christ’s presence. This is not to say that our work of ministry is unimportant or only secondary, but that it can only be done adequately and without anxiety if it is based on and finds its strength from our communion with our Lord.

The first reading is again from the prophet Amos. In his preaching, Amos often used symbols for the message. Last Sunday was the plumb line, today it is a basket of summer fruit. He uses a pun—in Hebrew, the word for “fruit” and the word for “end” sound alike—to announce that the end has come, God’s patience has run out for Israel, and it will be destroyed as a nation.

In today’s reading from Colossians, Paul tells us that the mystery that lies behind reality has been revealed in Christ. It is the life that we share in Christ by virtue of his dying and rising. In baptism, we enter that life, and it becomes our life. It is in that sharing of Christ’s life that we are empowered to minister and to pray as members of Christ’s Body.
